For Bargenale, she has employed the services of 23-year-old chef, Dieuveil Malonga. He is known by his second name, was born in the Congo, raised in Germany and creates what he describes as Afro-fusion cuisine in Paris. Lamy's choice relates to this year's Biennale, she says, curated by Nigerian-born Okwui Enwezor. "Malonga did a dish for us last night, shaped like Africa, with all these berries." It formed part of gallerist Jeanne Greenberg's birthday celebrations.
